Gospel: Matthew 11:25-30

The Priest of Hexham, 1110 A.D. who was chaplain to the chieftain of Scotland in his court. His virtue shone brightly to all, particularly his meekness. He wished to devote himself more entirely as he understood he lived in a privileged courtly life, so he joined an austere monastic Cisterian life, to the shock of his beloved people, who esteemed him so highly. Decades later he said, "Despite major conditions between courtly life and monastic life, this yoke does not crush but liberates the souls, this burden has wings not weight."

It's a terrible thought to think, people set fires to forests, grasslands, schools, warehouses, etc. Nobody sets fire to a bar.
