Martha and Mary certainly would have shared the burdens of running a household and farm. But there is a time when work has to stop so hospitality is offered to a visitor, in this case Jesus. Work is not the only value in life.

Universal Church

The Year of the Priests has ended. Experts have been warning of a looming shortage of Catholic priests. The Church has worked hard to protect most Catholics from feeling the shortage of priests. Projections strongly suggest that half of all currently active priests will retire in the next 10 years. By 2035, there may only be about 12,520 diocesan priests. What will this mean for lay Catholics? Will we be ready to make the sacrifices necessary to keep parish community active? For many years now, the Catholic laity has organized faith communities. This could be the beginning of the way of being church when the priest shortage hits home. The time is now begin to prepare for the inevitable.
