Junipero Serra (Part 9 of 15) Veracruz, the port where people left for Mexico City. Taking two weeks, Junipero Serra the Franciscan way walked all the way. He would not ride a mule, they had no food, water. God will provide was their faith. Serra's right foot all his life had inflammation, very painful. But it never stopped him. The Spanish had destroyed Aztec temples, palaces to wipe out native beliefs. They then built their government buildings over their conquered sacred sites. Mexico City had no defensive wall. 1510, population 250,000; when Serra arrived 1750 A.D., population 30,000 people, a phenomenal loss of life. The Indians were forced into labor by the Spanish.
